Ad Text Religious leaders joined local organizations in rallying support for two men who said they were attacked outside a convenience store this weekend in what police are investigating as a possible hate crime.

Authorities are reviewing surveillance video of the reported attack, which occurred shortly after 3 a.m. Saturday at the Kwik Shop at 4820 E. 21st St. That's just northeast of the Wichita State University campus.

One of the victims was Khondonkor Usama, Muslim 23, the second victim, is a 19-year-old student who has chosen to remain anonymous.

They were getting gas and snacks at about 3 a.m. Saturday when they noticed a man shouting at someone who had apparently asked him for gas money.

When the suspect began using racial slurs against the man who asked him for money, one of the students attempted to intervene.

The attacker then turned his wrath on the two students, stopping his motorcycle in front of Usama's car and approaching Usama's friend, who had gotten out of the car.

The suspect called his friend "brown trash" and told him he had to "leave this country,"

According to Usama's account, his friend responded: "This is my country. Who the hell are you to tell me to leave?"

The incident "escalated really quick," with the suspect attempting to punch his friend, Usama said. When he attempted to break up the fight, Usama said he was assaulted and knocked down.

He called 911, and as he was on the phone the attacker rode circles around the two students, chanting "Trump! Trump! Trump!" and screaming, "We'll make America great again! We'll throw you out of the wall!"
